Dear Gloria,

Will Equal Pay Make You Submissive in Bed?

"I raise this question because today I experienced the disorienting juxtaposition of Equal Pay Day with the retro notion that women's growing economic power makes us want to be dominated during sex.

Equal Pay Day marks the day in April when women wear red to signify we're in the red, earning but 77.4 cents to men's $1. And for African-American and Hispanic women the differential is even more extreme.

This marker of financial non-power came just after Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker disappeared the state's equal pay law. It also coincided with author and journalism professor Katie Roiphe's implausible analysis of the S and M-loving novel Fifty Shades of Gray. [Are You Angry Enough to Embrace Your Power-To?
\(3 Signs You Are\)](#)

"In decades of experience as a women's advocate, I've learned people can be inspired to action by one of two things: anger or aspiration."

"A roiling, boiling anger is propelling women - even many who've never been activists before - to embrace their "power to" to take leadership and make change. There was no one trigger, rather a succession of insults." I talked with Richard Lui about them on MSNBC's Jansing & Co. [\[read more here\]](#)
